A Brief History of Saratoga

Saratoga Springs with its Victorian architecture, rich history and world class cultural and entertainment venues has been honored over the years with the Inaugural Great American Place Award by American Heritage Magazine and the Distinctive Destination designation from the National Trust for Historic Preservation, along with numerous other lifestyle awards. Native Americans frequented mineral springs in the area for centuries before the arrival of settlers in the late 1700's. In 1802 Gideon Putnam, Saratoga's founding father, began to carve a resort out of the wilderness. His 70' long tavern, built at the corner of Broadway and Congress Street, was known in the late 1800's as the Grand Union Hotel, reputed to be the largest hotel in the world. The lure of the mineral springs, and the elegance of the summer season, aided by the advent of train travel in 1832, resulted in rapid growth. The area is still noted as one of the fastest growing in the state. Over the years, Saratoga Springs, the 'Queen of the Spas,' developed a worldwide reputation for Health, History and Horses. In spite of financial decline experienced during the mid-twentieth century, a strong preservation movement was initiated in the 1970's. This movement saved many of the buildings from the city's Victorian heyday, maintaining much of the city's rich architectural legacy for future generations.

Today, the city offers visitors a variety of open vistas, heritage areas, and a vibrant downtown district. Cultural offerings at the nationally recognized Saratoga Performing Arts Center, various museums, and the Spa Little Theatre, along with great shopping, fine accommodations, horse racing, dining, and the lure of free concerts in Congress Park make Saratoga Springs the place to be!
